The Intelligencer.

WHEELING, MARCH 10, 1892.

THE approaching contest is rendered especially important by reason of the industrial and financial policies of the Government being at stake. The popular decision on these issues is of great moment and will be of far-reaching consequence. James G. Blaine.

For the National Defense.

It is only about ten years since this country began to defend itself by legislation against some of the evident evils of the immigration that had been and then was pouring in. Little by little we have added to the laws on the subject, some of them good enough as far as they go, all of them more or less modified by administration, none of them getting down to the root of the evil.

But the years since the beginning have not been lost. There has been a steady and marked growth of public sentiment favorable to such measures as shall more effectively provide for the public defense against the evils which touch the bread-winning capacity of our people and degrade the quality of our population and citizenship.

Ten years ago a proposition to discourage immigration and establish a process of selection by the imposition of a good round head-tax would have been regarded with something like horror. It has taken time to get away from the notion that this country is and must remain the helpless prey of any hordes that may invade it so long as they do not force their way with powder and shot.

Our young people had read about this country as "an asylum for the oppressed of every land," and older heads had a notion that something of this sort is stuck fast in the constitution, never to be got out. It is a decided gain to have come out of this nightmare.

To-day the people are demanding something more and better for the national defense, and the best minds in the country are exercised on the line. Newspapers of character are falling in with the general proposition, some years ago advanced by the INTELLIGENCER, that a short cut is to be found in a stiff head-tax. Note what the New York Times says:

The truth is that to restrict immigration we must make it more expensive. A substantial head money tax, in no case amounting to less than the cost of a steerage passage, is the remedy the Times has long been advocating. It has now been advocated by a public man, who proposes to pay the head money at $100. Such an imposition would undoubtedly accomplish the purposes of restricting immigration, and it would restrict immigration by lifting it. We cannot restrict certain nationalities by name, but we can in effect prohibit them, or the undesirable among them by such a measure. It is not that we need the money, but that we need the test. We need to be assured that the immigrant is a person of some substance, which is the best guarantee we can have of his energy, thrift, and character—that is to say, of his desirability as a citizen. According to the law, to be repaid within two or three years to the immigrant or his representatives, provided he has maintained himself and behaved himself in the interval. It is not disputed that this measure would answer its purpose and would work automatically and without the cumbersome and unwieldy apparatus that would be required to investigate individually half a million cases every year. The only question about it is whether it can be passed. That can be satisfactorily ascertained only by trying. But if it cannot be passed, it cannot be passed simply because it is an effective measure, and in that case no measure of restriction can be passed that amounts to anything.

The public man referred to by the Times was taken to be General Francis A. Walker, of Massachusetts, superintendent of the tenth census, principal of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and one of the closest thinkers in the country. General Walker would put a head-tax of $100, returnable after a certain time and under certain conditions. The INTELLIGENCER thinks a tax of $200 is not too great. The point is, however, not so much the amount of the tax that shall be imposed as the fact that the proposition to put on a considerable tax is meeting with favor in influential quarters.

With the masses of the people and the leaders in thought and action aroused, there is good reason to think that Congress will see its way clear to come to the public relief and meet the public expectation. The politicians will do well to address themselves to the question before it gets into politics as a partisan movement.

Two Kinds of Fighters.

When the Czar of Russia heard that the Emperor of Germany had remarked at Brandenburg, "I pulverize Russia," he said to the German minister at St. Petersburg, "Tell your emperor that when he begins pulverizing I will throw half a million men across the frontier with the greatest pleasure."

There is no doubt that the Russian ruler can do this and would do it "with the greatest pleasure." The German sovereign would find infinite delight in meeting the half million Russians with more Germans, and the pleasant play would go on until a few hundred thousand subjects of each country had been sent to feed the worms.

What do these great ones by inhorance care for the butchery and the heart-aches. To them men are but machines, the mere tools of their trade. If the tools break, mend them if you have time; if not, throw them away and order more from the same shop. War is the pastime of kings. Nothing is too costly that gives spice to the life of royalty.

There is a marked difference between Alexander and William and the rest of them and such fighters as Sullivan, Fitzsimmons, Slavin and their kind; and this difference is largely in favor of the fellows who stake off a little spot in the universe and do their own fighting with their own fists.

Fighting Wives.

Mrs. Hetherington, whose husband, Lieutenant Hetherington, U. S. N., killed an Englishman in Yokohama, is said to have been fond of the admiration of men and to have found part of her enjoyment in fliriting.

At her old home in Wilmington, Delaware, it is said that she was a flirt before she was married. That was bad enough. As a flirting wife she has brought her husband face to face with a charge of murder.

The flirting wife is an abomination. The woman who is not content with being esteemed as a good wife and mother, who poses to win a train of admirers, sows dragon's teeth. She may never cause a murder, but she will be lucky if she do not figure in a scandal of some sort.

She may "mean no harm," but to fish for the admiration of other men is harm enough in itself, and no charity of construction can call it an innocent diversion. Of course all that applies to the wife applies with equal force to the husband.

Where to Look for Nominees.

There is some talk in the Democratic newspapers of certain Democratic states about the part likely to be played in the Democratic national convention by states that cannot give the nominee a single electoral vote. They are not naming names, but the names could easily be supplied.

For example, Ill will have seventy-two votes from his own state, yet there is surely not a Democratic politician who now thinks that Ill could carry the electoral vote of New York. Cleveland will have the bulk, perhaps all, of Pennsylvania's strength in the convention; and so far as the Democratic ticket is concerned that will be the last of Pennsylvania in the campaign.

It would seem to be reasonable that each party shall defer to the states that must be looked to to carry its nominee through, if he can be carried through at all. For the gulf states to dictate the Republican nomination or the Pacific states the Democratic, would be queer politics.

Looking to Illinois.

Colonel Morrison says he would like to be President, and if his state delegation were for him he rather thinks he could go into the Democratic convention with some prospect of success, but Palmer having been on the turf setting up things, Colonel Morrison does not pretend to read his title clear.

There is in Colonel Morrison's tone a strain of savage hostility to Palmer which may induce the Democratic convention to look outside of Illinois for a Presidential nominee. But what's the odds? No Democrat can carry Illinois.

There is nothing in the history of Memphis to encourage a suspicion that three negroes accused of murdering white men would be likely to escape conviction because of any prejudice in favor of their race. This could not have been the reason why the mob took the negroes out of the jail and shot them to pieces. The act seems rather to have been merely a wild riot of lawlessness which has put a dark blot on the chief city of Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN sees no good at all in a protective tariff, and under the inspiration of free wool he sails into the whole protective system. Every American who believes in that system will take notice that the slogan of free trade calls him to the defense of protection. To-day the shot is aimed at one schedule; to-morrow it will be aimed at another.

Adverse comment on his share in the scheme to hand Chicago over to a power supply combine has induced the mayor of that city to shut reporters out of his office as being unclean. His honor has also gone so far as to stop the Tribune—that is, the copy of that great newspaper which has been going to him. The INTELLIGENCER is glad to see that the Tribune is still in the field.

The New York World contributed a great deal to the Democratic revolt against Hill's snap convention. Now it is striving with no less energy to undo what it helped to do. The Hill kind of politician doesn't mind the kind of protest which it now seems that the World contemplated. The kind against which the World is now protesting is the kind that hurts the Hill kind.

Mrs. Osborne was guilty as charged of larceny and perjury, and so it is just that she be sentenced to pay the penalty. The chivalrous conduct of her husband and the certainty that his suffering is greater than hers can be, give rise to some hope against hope that the woman might escape.

Congressman DALLZELL is having a good deal of a boom for the United States senate as successor to Senator Quay. It is said that he is able and pursues the best methods in politics. This is all very true, but what does he know about tarpon fishing? This is the crucial test.

Dr. George I. MILLER, of the Democratic committee of Nebraska, has uttered these mighty words: "I have this remark, not three days old," from Grover Cleveland: "The blunders being made by the present Democratic Congress have never been exceeded." If Mr. Cleveland made this admission it means that in his opinion his presidential chance has given up the ghost.

BREAKFAST BUDGET.

The Philadelphia Academy of Fine Arts has lost a collection of paintings worth $200,000, which Mrs. Anna Wilsch, who died a few days ago, was expected to bequeath it. A few years ago Mrs. Wilsch was refused free admission tickets to the academy by an overzealous official, who did not realize evidently that she was entitled to them in her capacity of stockholder.

Sig. Farina, who sang with Parepa, Nilsson and Luca, is training a troop of singers of African descent for the grand opera stage. Solika, the octoroon soprano, was a pupil of Farina, and the idea of training blacks to the highest flights of musical genius was inspired by Solika's marvellously melodious voice.

In Old Age—Written on My Eighty-seventh Birthday.

What is it now to live? It is to breathe The air of heaven, behold the pleasant earth, The shining rivers, the inconstant sea, Sublimity of mountains, wealth of clouds, And radiance of all celestial stars. It is to sit before the cheerful hearth, With groups of friends and kindred, store of books, Bright beaming from glass past, Hold sweet communion, soul with soul, On things now past, or present, or to come, Or muse alone upon my earlier days, The story of my life, when I was writ In that unknown, mysterious realm Which lies beyond the range of mortal ken, Where souls immortal do forever dwell; Think of loved ones who await me there, And without murmuring or inward grief, With mind unbroken and no fear, Calmly await the coming of the Lord.

AFTER THE GRIPPE.

The Grippe Responsible for More Deaths After Recovery Than During Its Course. How to Avoid the Danger.

Grippe, in itself, is bad enough, debilitating enough, but it is the after effects, the slowness of recovery that give it its great danger. In most cases, the person did not have sufficient vitality to rally after the disease itself had passed. The forces of nature were too weak to contend with the debility which the Grippe had left.

It is sad to think how many people have died who might have saved if nature had been properly assisted and fortified after the Grippe had been driven from the system. Many physicians realized this fact and assisted their patients over the dangerous after-effects by bracing up and stimulating their systems. This was, and can be done in but one way and that is by the steady and moderate use of some pure yet powerful stimulant. There is but one absolutely pure and medicinal stimulant known to the profession and to the public, and that is DUFFY'S Pure Malt Whiskey. The most prominent scientists and physicians of the land endorse its purity and value. It is not a new whiskey, it has been before the public for years. It is not a cheap decoction, but a pure distillation. It imparts a tone to the system possible in no other manner and sends the blood coursing through the veins with renewed vigor. It is superior in every respect and however much any unscrupulous druggist or grocer may seek to lead you to believe to the contrary do not be deceived.

Ohio Legislature.

Special Dispatch to the Intelligencer.

COLUMBUS, O., March 9.—The most lively scenes of the 70th general assembly were witnessed in the lower house this afternoon when the Sterritt bill came up for final passage. The principal provision of the substitute bill was to place the government of medical practice in Ohio in the hands of a board of seven trustees to grant certificates and examine diplomas of physicians coming from other states. There was a determined opposition to the bill, and amendments almost innumerable were offered until the clerk announced that it would be absolutely a physical impossibility to engross the bill. A motion to postpone one year was finally made and the bill was thus annihilated. The feeling was decidedly warm during discussion.

The house also passed Mr. Bruck's bill pensioning disabled firemen in cities of the first class.
